

Colin is an architect, a former editor of The Architects' Journal and a regular contributor to architectural magazines worldwide. He was until recently Professor of Architectural Theory at London Metropolitan University. He has made numerous television and radio appearances and, in addition to NADFAS, lectures to history and arts societies, universities and colleges. His books include 'Thinking About Architecture', 'The Prefabricated Home', 'High Tech Architecture' and 'Key Houses of the Twentieth Century' and he has written several monographs on the work of architects such as Norman Foster, Michael Hopkins and Nicholas Grimshaw. In addition to writing and lecturing, Colin continues to work as a freelance architect.