

James Wright FSA, archaeologist and historian, is a doctoral researcher at the University of Nottingham. He has worked in several areas of the heritage sector and has experience as a field archaeologist, conservation stonemason, community archaeologist, historic stone specialist, archival researcher, historic graffiti specialist and buildings archaeologist. He also has experience of working within development control in the planning system, as well as working with historic environmental records. His principle interest is buildings archaeology and he has led projects on sites including the Tower of London, Southwark Cathedral, Knole, Tattershall Castle, the Palace of Westminster and King John's Palace. With over twenty years of professional experience, he has published two books and a string of popular and academic articles concentrating on the British Mediaeval and Early Modern periods. He has lectured to a wide variety of organisations including Historic Royal Palaces, the National Trust, Lowdham Book Festival, the Fortean Society, Gresham College, Shakespeare400, the Museum of London and, of course, The Arts Society.
